Will all cows calve on the due to calve date?

Just as all human babies are not born on their exact due dates neither will all calves be born on their predicted due date either. Herd Health Services Due Date Certification should predict the actual conception date within about 5 days most of the time. There is also variation of gestation length between sires and dams that lead to spread of actual calvings. It is expected though, most animals will calve within 10 days of the predicted due date and 90% should be calved within 14 days either side of the certified due date.

The Herd Health Services Due Date Certification program is designed to give buyers confidence in the pregnancy status and likely calving date of the females certified.

All female sale lots that carry an * have been pregnancy scanned by Herd Health Services at a stage of gestation that allows for accurate estimation of the likely conception date. Standard gestation lengths are then added to provide an accurate estimation of due to calve date.
